THE RICE HOMESTEAD AT WORTHINGTON.

Built in 1863.

INTRODUCTION.

JOSEPH RICE, our great-grandfather, was a twin son of Ebenezer and Anna Rice, his brother Benjamin having been born on the same day, February 2, 1745, in the town of Westborough, Mass., which then had a population of about 900 inhabitants. At the age of twenty-eight he was married to Mary Green, of Westborough, June 18, 1772. He continued to live in that town for a year or two after his marriage, where his first child was born, and then removed to Conway, Mass., where all the rest of his children were born, and where he died, in March, 1826, at the age of eighty-one years.

This town of Conway, which for fifty-two or more years had been the home of our common ancestor, in which he labored at his trade of blacksmithing, raised a large family, and became largely identified with the social, political and religious interests of the place, was settled by one Cyrus Rice, who was born at Worcester, 1726; removed to Barre after his marriage in 1750, and early in 1762 removed to Conway, and became the first settler in that town. Upon arriving at Conway, he was obliged to clear the land on which he settled, plant his crops and build his house. His wife died soon after her arrival. The first child born in that town was his daughter Beulah, in 1763. Mr. Alonzo Rice, of Deerfield, a grandson of Cyrus Rice, has pointed out the very site where once stood the house of his grandfather and the place to-day is marked by a mound of stones. Conway seemed to be the Mecca of the Rice family. For there lived Stephen and Cyrus and Jonas and Caleb Rice; and beyond the river in Broomshire lived Israel and Austin and Timothy Rice. With so many Rices gathered together in one town, it is hardly to be wondered at that our common ancestor, Joseph Rice, should feel attracted toward the place, and finally make it his home.

It may be interesting to note, in this brief biographical sketch of Joseph Rice, some of the conditions of the times in which he lived. At the time of his birth, in 1745, the country now known as the United States of America was in the possession of the English, the French, and the Spanish. England held the territory along the Atlantic border, excluding Florida; the whole West from Quebec to the Mississippi and New Orleans belonged to France; and Florida was in possession of Spain.

At the same time, the French and Indian War was still raging against the English, and oftentimes the savage Indians would sweep down upon some town or hamlet in places now known as Worcester and Deerfield, and in other places not far removed from Westboro, murder the inhabitants and burn up their houses. He was fourteen years old when England gained the supremacy over the allied forces of the French and the Indians (1759), and peace was declared. As the result of that victory, the flag of England and of the English colonies floated over the whole eastern section of the American continent, from the Atlantic to the great river of the West, with the exception of the Louisiana territory west of the Mississippi, which France had secretly transferred to Spain.

Hardly had the country recovered from the terrible experience of those awful days of massacre and conflagration which characterized the struggle of that French and Indian War, before the feeling of discontent asserted itself, fanning the smouldering embers of independence among the colonists into a raging flame of passion and open hostility. The cause of this renewed upheaval was the attempt to place upon the colonists the expense of the previous war by imposing upon the people a system of heavy taxation. The students of history are too familiar with the outcome of that action, and it will not be necessary to speak of it here. Suffice it to say, Joseph Rice was thirty-one years of age when the Declaration of Independence was declared, and the first blow struck in the cause of liberty and independence. He had now reached a period in life in which he could appreciate the sentiments of religious and political freedom, and share with his fellow-citizens the patriotism that was burning in the hearts of the colonists as they stood forth and protested against the tyranny and rapacity of the English Government.

We have but few personal records preserved to us bearing upon any individual act of Joseph Rice that would distinguish him above his fellow-citizens at this anxious period in his life. But the few facts that we have give clear evidence that he bravely and patriotically took up the cause of American Independence, and fought with heroism side by side with his compatriots.

One incident has been preserved to us which unquestionably substantiates these conclusions. After the Continental Congress had proclaimed its manifesto that the North American Colonies should be independent of Great Britain, the citizens of Conway gathered together in their meeting-house in "Pumpkin Hollow" on May 24, 1776, and there debated the question whether they should abide by the action taken by the Continental Congress. It was a notable gathering; and doubtless the little meeting-house was packed to the doors with the loyal-hearted people of Conway. Many members of the Rice family were there. In fact, Cyrus Rice himself presided over the meeting, and it is reasonable to suppose that Joseph Rice was there to lend his influence and to give his vote in support of the independence of his country. The result of that meeting showed of what material the Rices were made, and how willing they were to give their services for the good of their country. The following resolution, after having been carefully prepared by a special committee, was put to a vote and adopted:

"If the Honorable Continental Congress Should think it Requisite for the Safty of the Northamerican Colonies on this Continent to Declare a State of Independency of Greatbriton that we will abide By and Conform to their wisdom to the Expense of our lives and fortunes."

Such was the resolution passed in those anxious days in that little meeting-house where gathered the loyal and devoted citizens of Conway. History records how faithfully they stood by that pledge. Among those who volunteered to aid the American forces to free this country from the grasp of Great Britain, was Joseph Rice, who entered with others in the eight months' service of Oliver's company, Doolittle's regiment—that noted little band that did such noble service as "minute men" at the beginning of the War of the Revolution.

A little incident of those days has been preserved and handed down to us, which gives us another insight into the character of Joseph Rice. At that time a very close friendship existed between three active Republicans, and at a time when political feelings entered sharply into social relations—John Arms, Dr. William Hamilton and Colonel Joseph Rice. On one occasion a serious dispute arose between the people of Conway and of Deerfield concerning the possession of "the old Deerfield gun." These three men were asked to arbitrate the question of dispute. So serious became the matter that at one time it was thought a riot would ensue. Colonel Joseph Rice on this occasion showed his sterling worth by strenuously urging that the laws should be respected.

The outcome of the whole matter was that these men decided that the old gun held by the Conway people should be returned to the people of Deerfield, who had the prior claim to it.

But very meagre accounts have been preserved of this our common grandfather, but these little glimpses at least reveal some of the sterling qualities that went to make up his character. We can safely say that he was a man of sound mind, frugal, and of industrious habits, and of strict integrity of character.

He survived the War of the Rebellion, and lived to see Washington elected President, and Adams, and Jefferson, and Madison and Monroe, who succeeded him. He lived to hear, and doubtless to read about, Robert Fulton's great invention, the steamboat, which steamed up the Hudson in 1807; which when the sailors living on the shores saw, they became greatly agitated, and fell upon their knees, and asked to be saved from the evil one. He lived also to see the country plunged again into war with England in 1812, and to rejoice in the peace declared on December 24, 1814. He also lived to hear of the adoption by Congress of the famous Monroe Doctrine, that Europe must keep her hands off both American continents.

His certainly was a life full of changes. It started with England in possession of the colonies, and ended with the full establishment of the Government of the United States. His life opened with the subjects of the English Crown ruling over the colonies, and closed with President Monroe guiding the destinies of the young Republic. In March, 1826, he was called from the scenes of his labors to that reward that awaits those who have fought the good fight of faith. He lived to the ripe old age of eighty-one years, and left behind him a record of good deeds for the guidance and emulation of those who were to follow him.

In the following compilation, which was gathered in 1904, only that branch of the Rice family who are the lineal descendants of Joseph Rice, of Conway, Mass., is traced.

Our first ancestor in this country was Edmund Rice, who was born in England about 1594; came to America in 1639; settled at Sudbury, Mass., and afterwards at Marlboro, where he died May 3, 1663. His son Benjamin, born in 1640, begat Ebenezer, 1671; Ebenezer begat Ebenezer, Jr., 1709; Ebenezer, Jr., begat Joseph, 1745.
